The Universities Federation for Animal Welfare (UFAW) Wild Animal Welfare Award 2006

17th October 2005

The Universities Federation for Animal Welfare (UFAW) is inviting applications and nominations for its 2006 Wild Animal Welfare Award. The Award recognises innovations that are designed to improve the welfare of captive wild animals or which alleviate human-induced harm to animals in the wild.

Applications for the Award are invited from all those working with free-living or captive wild animals, for example in wildlife management and conservation, research, zoos and wildlife rehabilitation.

Up to two awards will be made, each of £1,000, to support further development of the recipient's interests in animal welfare. One will be made for the best innovation for the welfare of captive wild animals in the UK and one for the best innovation for the welfare of free-living wild animals in the UK. Applicants will need to present evidence in their applications that their innovation benefits the animal from the animal's point of view.

Winner of the Award in 2004 was the Game Conservancy Trust for its 'Mink Raft' – an innovation which eliminates harm to other species when trapping mink, voracious predators of the endangered water vole. In 2005, Paignton Zoo won the Award for its innovative incorporation of positive reinforcement training into the care of primates, enabling less stressful husbandry procedures such as dental care.

UFAW is an internationally recognised scientific and educational animal welfare charity, promoting high standards of welfare for all animals with which humans interact – be they in zoos, on farms, in research, in the wild or companion animals.
