TW20 0EX
T: +44 (0)1784 443045

The Royal Holloway campus is located in Egham - less than 40 minutes by train from central London and only seven miles from Heathrow airport.

Founded by the Victorian entrepreneur and philanthropist Thomas Holloway in 1886, the campus is set in 135 acres of parkland and includes the spectacular Victorian Founder's Building – which is one of the venues used by the symposium. The Founder's Building is built around two quadrangles and includes a beautiful gilded chapel and picture gallery – the latter the venue for the symposium drinks reception on the 27th. Symposium delegates can also book accommodation in the Building for the duration of the meeting.

• History of Royal Holloway

Royal Holloway College was founded by the Victorian entrepreneur and philanthropist Thomas Holloway in 1886. The self-made multi-millionaire made his fortune in patent medicines and, after initiating a public debate inviting suggestions as to 'how best to spend a quarter of a million pounds or more', he took his wife's advice that a college for women would prove 'the greatest public good'.

Royal Holloway College, largely inspired by the Château Chambord in the Loire Valley, was opened by Queen Victoria in 1886. The Founder's Building, which is built around two quadrangles and includes a beautiful gilded chapel and picture gallery, is one of the most spectacular university buildings in the world.

Thomas Holloway was not the first Victorian visionary to realise the benefits of an education for women. Elizabeth Jesser Reid, a pioneering social reformer, founded Bedford College in 1849 as the first college in Great Britain for the higher education of women. In 1900, Royal Holloway College and Bedford College became part of the University of London, the first institution in the UK to award degrees to women.

Both Bedford and Royal Holloway admitted male undergraduates for the first time in 1965, but their commitment to women's education remained. The 1982 partnership agreement between the two colleges paved the way for the merger in 1985 to create what is today known as Royal Holloway, University of London.

The College's Art Collections contain world-class paintings, sculptures, prints, drawings and watercolours including works by William Powell Frith, John Everett Millais and Edward Burne-Jones.
